Introduction

Abortion is the termination of a pregnancy and has been a topic of debate for decades. It can be caused by natural factors or induced medically.

Abortion is not only a medical procedure but it also involves ethical and moral issues, as well as political controversy.

There are many types of abortion such as spontaneous abortion, therapeutic abortion, forced abortion, etc. There are various methods used for abortion like vacuum aspiration, dilation, curettage, medication abortion, etc.

Types of Abortion

Spontaneous Abortion: It is also known as a miscarriage or premature birth which occurs naturally due to certain factors like a physical abnormality in the fetus, genetic problem, or health condition of the mother.

Therapeutic Abortion: It is done to save the life of the mother. This type of abortion is usually recommended in cases where there is a risk of death or severe health damage due to pregnancy.

Forced Abortion: Forced abortions are usually used as a form of population control and are considered unethical by the majority.

Causes Of Abortion

There are many causes of abortion such as inadequate prenatal care, current health condition and age of the mother, economic pressures, and lack of access to contraception and family planning services. In some countries, women are subjected to forced abortions due to population control policies which are highly unethical.

Methods Used For Abortion

Vacuum Aspiration: It is the most common method used for abortion. In this procedure, a tube is inserted into the uterus and a vacuum is used to remove the fetus and other tissues.

Dilation and Curettage (D&C): In this method, dilators are inserted into the cervix to widen it and then curettes are used to scrape out the contents of the uterus.

Medication Abortion: This method involves taking two medications, mifepristone, and misoprostol, to end the pregnancy. It is very safe and effective but is not available in all countries.

Principles and Laws Related to Abortion

Abortion is a controversial issue with different laws in different countries. In some countries, it is legal with certain restrictions while in other countries it is completely illegal. There are also religious and moral principles related to abortion which vary from one religion to another.

Religious Point of View About Abortion

Different religions have different views on abortion depending upon the teachings of their respective holy books. Christianity, Judaism, and Islam all condemn abortion, whereas Hinduism and Buddhism accept it in certain circumstances.
